My experience on this retreat the last two weeks has been life changing, I mean, really just incredible. I came down with a lot of intentions and hopes of what I wanted to work on here, but really no expectations. I kinda came to find out what would happen and it's just far surpassed anything I could have expected. I feel like a completely different person. I feel like I got exactly what I needed. It's like a deep level of healing that I knew I couldn't get to on my own. It was work at times. I really had to surrender to the process and accept it and trust that ayahuasca and everything I was doing here was all working towards my greater good. And it absolutely did. The retreat was amazing and it was really difficult, but the rewards were so much more thorough. You have to work for it. It doesn't just come to you. It's not a magic pill. I think a lot of us want a magic pill to make everything just kinda go away and be better, but ayahuasca really makes you look at yourself, but in a way that's not overwhelming. You can get past it. If you can just stick with it, you can get past it. I realized that healing doesn't happen without feeling paid, and I think so much of our culture wants to get away from that and just doesn't want to feel the pain at all, but through this retreat I've realized that you have to go through that process to come out the other side and actually, actually heal.
