So what do you do when you're out in the world and see a plant you want to know more about? Even the most skilled gardener or wilderness explorer might have trouble identifying a unique plant— at least, until now. PlantNet is similar to LeafSnap in that you take a photo of a plant as part of the identification process, and the app can then quickly tell you the name of it from its database of more than 20,000 different species. The free iOS and Android app evaluates a plant based on its leaves, flowers, fruits, bark and surrounding habitat. Discord operates using various servers, each of which is populated with different channels. Channels are like individual chat rooms where you can discuss specific topics. While you can have your own private room where only friends or those connected to your gameplay can join, there are other public rooms and places on Discord where you can find people with similar interests. There, you can join the themed channels and begin chatting about their topics with other users. You can also choose not to download any software and open Discord in your internet browser while you're gaming. Start Conversations One of the most difficult parts of meeting people in the real world is actually starting a conversation with someone you're interested in. When you're using a dating app, much of the work is done for you, because everyone's there for the same reason. In real life, it can be difficult to know if someone is interested in talking to you. This means that you'll need to exercise emotional intelligence and be willing to experience rejection when trying to flirt with someone. While it might not sound like it, this is actually a good thing. This gives you an opportunity to be vulnerable, take risks, and to further develop your ability to read social cues. The free app also has links to factsheets about different plants, a map you can build out based on your observations and information about the family or genus of the identified species. Via the app, you can share your observations with other users. In addition, the app enables you to learn about the possible flora in your surrounding location so you can go out and search for the unique plants yourself. iNaturalist Is Ideal for Botanists The iOS and Android app iNaturalist is the best app for scientists and naturalists who focus on studying plants, and it aims to foster a community in which botanists and people who are interested in biodiversity can share and discuss their observations. In addition, the free app provides high-quality, scholarly information for scientists who are working hard to preserve nature. Developed through a collaboration between the California Academy of Sciences and National Geographic, the app helps users learn the names of plants from photos, but it also provides information about each plant's purpose.
