If you do it right, it can add liquidity to your finances and allow you to recoup the value of a major investment. Done wrong, you might suffer financial loss. Take the steps below to sell your home well and avoid downside risks. Preparing Your Home for Sale Getting your home ready for sale should start early in the process, as soon as you've decided that you are going to sell. There are some things you can do at this stage that will help you get the maximum value when it's selling time. You should get a home inspection to identify potential problems and opportunities for improvement. Ideally, aspects like plumbing, electrical wiring, roofs, and AC systems should all be checked. Ask the home inspector for advice on fixes you can make. If you have a friend in the real estate business, he or she might be able to advise you on potential fixes. Since much relies on looks, this is also a good time to get a professional cleaning for your house. Make rugs, walls, and floors spotless and as new. Why You Should Go for a Real Estate Agent While it might be tempting to sell your house all by yourself, this might not be the best move. Consider the finances first. Homes that are for sale by owner tend to sell for prices less than those where a real estate agent is involved. Build Your Own Sewing Kit With These Essential Tools. Your stitches will stay in place until your skin has healed. The length of time it takes to recover will depend on the severity of the wound. A doctor can remove the stitches with tweezers once the healing is complete. You may also get a skin ointment that you can use once the stitches are out to help minimize scarring. One exception to this is when your stitches are with vicryl sutures. Vicryl is a type of thread that dissolves in the skin, meaning that you won't need to go back to the doctor to get your stitches removed. The Ukrainian parliament amended the criminal code to increase prison sentences for theft under martial law in early March. The measure was justified by the fact that looting had become "widespread" and civilians were pushed to "administer justice" themselves in the face of weak criminal consequences. But the amendment says nothing about public humiliation or shooting looters. Tetiana Pechonchyk, head of the Ukrainian human rights

NGO ZMINA, told the FRANCE 24 Observers team: "It is legal for citizens to detain and immobilise potential looters before the police arrive. But ill-treatment and torture are illegal, even under martial law." ZMINA and other NGOs said in a joint statement: "Attempts by local communities to stop criminals on their own are an understandable and justified decision, but the perpetrators must be immediately handed over to the appropriate law enforcement agencies." Tying a person to a pole as punishment is not new in Ukraine in times of crisis. Since at least 2014, photos and videos showing similar acts have been shared online. For example, this customs officer was bound to a pole after being accused of corruption in February 2014 in Zakarpattia oblast. A woman named Iryna Dovhan was similarly punished by pro-Russian separatists in Donetsk in August 2014 for supporting the Ukrainian army.
