One such website, shown above, offers a small catalog of etizolam tablets marketed as "research chemicals." The website states that it does not sell etizolam to anyone who is not a "research institution," yet features no safeguards or verification which prevent purchases by individuals. While marketed as "not for human consumption," the merchant has a Reddit account and frequently interacts with user inquiries about purchasing etizolam, ultimately directing traffic to their website. See the screenshot below. The DEA TOX program announced the identification of the opioid substance 2-methyl AP-237 last Friday. The substance was detected in whole blood samples submitted to the NPS surveillance program from an overdose death case in Kansas (January 2021) and from a non-fatal overdose case in Nebraska (March 2021). 2-methyl AP-237 is a methyl derivative of the opioid bucinnazine (AP-237), which is structurally distinct from fentanyl analogs. Read the full alert here. Although it is not permitted for human consumption in the US, etizolam is frequently abused by US-based consumers, who purchase the compound for its powerful sedative effects. It can take the form of a powder, tablet, or spiked blotter paper. Many online vendors appear to sell foreign-manufactured tablets that likely either ship from outside the US or have entered the US through unofficial channels. From Us. In 2013, Spenser Smith went looking online for a new drug. The 21-year-old addict found Etizolam and ordered it from China. One sniff of the synthetic narcotic knocked him out and left him suicidal and frantic. The drug has now appeared in the B.C. drug supply and Smith says he fears for people who are ingesting it accidentally. The benzodiazepine-like drug is touted to provide sedation, euphoria and can reduce anxiety. It's not prescribed in North America, but it's commonly used to treat anxiety and depression in other countries. Where can I find a reliable supplier for synthetic cannabinoids?. New drug mix causing harder-to-revive overdoses, sparking panic in Vancouver.

After the drug arrived, Smith headed to his grandmother's garage to sniff the white powder right away, despite reading warnings that inexact doses could be dangerous. "One sniff and I blacked out instantly," said Smith, whose memory of the next few days remains blurry. He awoke 24 hours later in an aggravated state. He said he was frantic and searching for his drugs. He hurled furniture and tried to shower with his clothes on. He was making such a ruckus his grandmother called his parents who rushed over.
