I'm just trying to get Kinny to pop-off again by posting about Genesis and recruiting. Like the Infantry -> Rangers, you're still doing most of the same things you've already done, but instead of doing it with A-C rank guys, you and everyone else are at least S rank if not S++ so there's more faith in doing more sensitive missions and there's more infrastructure and material pushed your way because you've demonstrated you won't waste it. A fairly salty infantry senior NCO was talking about VSO being conducted by an SF team, pointed out that if you only grabbed SNCOs from a company and told them to do VSO, you'd basically be getting an SF both in size and in function. And that analogy in my opinion extends to CAG. Just like you're only grabbing the best members with demonstrated experience in the VSO story, in CAG you're doing Army stuff (well paramilitary stuff too) with only the best that other units have to offer. Buddy said he was driving when he first got there and came upon a guard shack, so he handed the guy his CAC. Guy told him "You are going to need a lot more than that to get in here" and turned him around. That was Dale Comstock. And yes, CAG is unparalleled in the world. The frequency of the missions, the sheer amount of money Beckwidth was able to provide delta with, the fact that Delta doesn't have any Army bureaucracy to deal with, the fact that you have to already be SOF to try out. Delta Force is the best in the world, after that comes Dutch KCT. We all know the unit is secretive although I think some members names are known. So when asked "what do you do in the army" or "what unit are you in" what do Delta Force operators usually say? Also are they usually given a cover story for the years in Delta Force so that once they get out they have an explanation for what they've been doing all those years? In a frontline, how can an armoured brigade pin down a whole division?. I went through BCT so I recognize 17 mistakes that delta force just made. They didn't even 3-5 second rush. Pfft. Investigators believe the time of death was likely to have been several days prior to the discovery of the bodies on December 2. The Ft. Bragg area had rainy weather the afternoon of November 29 and into the next day. These rains would have disturbed the tracks left in the sand by one or more vehicles that would have traveled down the dirt road before or on the 29th. Thus, the tracks found by investigators are believed to have occurred after the 30th. Unfortunately, the soft and loose sand in this area does not leave clear impressions of tire treads that investigators could match to a tire type, size, and possible vehicle type to aid them in identifying others who may have been involved in these murders and who would be driving a second vehicle.
