Knights during the medieval period were expected to maintain their equipment and serve as heavy cavalry for their lords in exchange for estates and the income those lands generated. Knights were expected to follow the chivalric code, which prescribed honorable behavior in battle and strict rules about courtship. Beginning during the Renaissance, the shift to humanism drew emphasis away from these strict codes of conduct, and knighthood eventually became a system of honorific titles rather than sworn service. For companies like Uber and Lyft, driving is a flexible job based on one's availability. So long as retirees complete a background check and have access to a car, they can pick up as many or as few hours as they like.

Websites. Venture capitalists are obligated to perform due diligence on potential business investments. They must comb through records, financial statements, ask questions and talk to people at all levels in an organization. They perform these tasks to formulate an informed opinion as to whether a business shows enough potential profitability to warrant investing client dollars. Many of these business opportunities are unproven startups that could quickly go out of business or become wildly successful. The venture capitalist must weigh all the facts to make a decision as to which end of that spectrum a potential investment will fall. Venture capital firms often require a seat on the board of directors of an organization in which they invest. The firm's employees fill these seats to help steer the company in which they've taken a stake.
